The Cruise and Shipwreck of the "Japan."

The bark Japan being the first whaler ever fitted out through Victorian Agency, no vessel ever left port with greater expectations or well wishes prosperous voyage than she, when, on the 5th of March with her lofty canvas spread to a favorable breeze, she soon left Melbourne and its happy reminiscences far in the distance.

After a prosperous cruise, during which we visited several of the picturesque islands which beautify the South Pacific, we called at New Zealand, there to relit for a voyage to the Arctic ocean, and for that purpose lay in the Bay of Islands, where, transhipping our oil, we remained till the 9th of March, on which day we weighed anchor, and after passing through the tropics without any incident worthy of remark, arrived in the colder latitudes of the north. We sighted strong gale of wind sprung up from the N. E., cranes. The gale increasing in fury during the divided, taken ashore, and placed in pits, the night, and a heavy fog setting in next morning, warmth of which soon reduces it to a state of dethe Captain was unable to obtain any observabeing the faster vessel, soon left the other astern, when all of a sudden to our consternation, we observed land right under our bows, too close however, to allow of our clearing it. She struck soon after with terrific force, the sea at the same time sweeping her decks fore and aft and carrying away everything offering resistance to its re-

The greater number of the crew jumped overboard and endeavored to reach the shore (a distance of about two furlongs) eight of whom perished in the attempt. Two more unfortunate men, refusing to leave the ship miserably perished there. Two men having reached the beach in salety, took a run, endeavoring to restore circulation to their almost frozen blood, and when doing so were greatly surprised at beholding the foot marks of a dog on the snow, which they tracted for a considerable distance, and to their great delight, (the fog clearing off) espied an Esquimaux village. Immediately on doing so they returned to their almost despair comrades, who joyfully accompanied them to the village in which

It may be necessary here to state, that the coast on which we found ourselves so suddenly Maternal love is strongly exemplified in this placed, was that of the extreme north of Siberia, about 66 o north latitude.

On arriving at the village, the inhabitants of pearance treated us with great kindness, giving itude, and initiated as one of the family. us skin clothing in exchange for our ice covered of our ill fated ship, at the same time shutting off all hopes of saving any provision. And to make matters worse, wood being unobtainable in this desolate spot, we were denied the luxury of a fire during the winter, either for culquite unknown to this benighted race.

revolting circumstances that decency forbids a our scruples and after a few weeks could eat our share with any of them.

Having come to the conclusion that exercise was the only means of preserving health, we used there deposited, to be devoured by dogs, crows to provide the houses with fresh water ice (for and other animals. which we had to take long journeys), which being pounded up with oil is eaten with great gusto by the natives. We also performed long journeys to the adjacent villages, (during which one more of our number had to succumb to the fearful cold) at all of which places we were received by the inhabitants with great hospitality, and we looked upon as little short of deities. I having the fort- rich resplendant rays the beautiful prismatic une upon one occasion to stop an effusion of blood from a child's nose in a house I was visiting, by moon's soit light tends to complete the magnifi-simply placing a piece of ice on its back, I was looked upon as something supernatural.

The monotony of our winter life was only relieved by sleigh racing. In the spring, however, we performed long excursions with the natives after polar bears, seals, &c.; when we frequently met with the natives of the American or eastern shore. They speak an entirely different dialect from those on the Asiatic side, and seem a much more savage race of people. In such pursuits we managed to pass the time until the month of March, on the 15th day of which the ice opening a little, a great number of whales were to be seen wending their way to the northward. A few days later, schools of walrus made their appearance, followed by large flocks of ducks which proved a great addition to our larder. The ice now breaking up, we lived in anticipation of seeing some adventursome whaler forcing its way through an obstacle which the sun's rays were daily lessening. We were doomed to repeated disappointment, until the 16th of June, when to our immeasureable delight, we sighted the bark John Wells of New Bedford. But immediately on doing so it set in a dense fog, lasting for three days, at the end of which time we managed to get a canoe, which we hauled a great distance over the ice and at last launched it in the open water, when after paddling all day we arrived on board at 8 P. M., where we were received with great kindness by the Captain, who provided us with clothing. We were finally distributed among the numerous whalers then rapidly flocking through the straits, and on board of which we remained until that unfortunate fleet, numbering over 33 vessels, was blocked in by the ice at Point Franklin. The fleet was deserted on the 17th of September, and after traveling a considerable distance in the boats we were fortunate enough to meet with seven vessels, which not venturing so far in the ice were enabled to take us on board, and in one of them, (the bark Chance of Sydney), we arrived at Honolulu after a pleasant passage.

MANNERS AND CUSTOMS OF THE ESQUIMAUX. The coast of North Siberia presents a very barren and rugged aspect, being utterly devoid of all vegetation with the exception of a few hardy herbs and mosses, which grow with rapidity during the summer months. The interior is, however, very flat, and only diversified by large rivers, winding through this desolate waste of which it is composed, which in summer are well stocked with fish and water fowl, numbers of BROADCLOTHS, CASSIMERES, which migrate to these barren regions during The natives of the Asiatic side of the Arctic ocean, on which we were wrecked, are a mixed the Russian and Tartar tribes. They are of a medium height, and uncommonly stout in pro-portion to their stature. Some are of a dark copper color, while others approach nearer the European features and complexion. Though the features of the men are exempted from the savage custom of tattooing, those of the women are not so, some of whom would be pretty were it not for the rude devices about their face and arms. They seldom engage in any quarrels among themselves, unless when under the influence of alcohol, which they procure from the traders, when any misdemeanor committed by them during that time is freely forgiven after the pernicious effects of the liquor have passed away. And such is their immoderate love of the narcotic weed, that children of both sexes are to be seen a few months old engaged in the most Christian accomplishment of chewing. In the summer months, they live in huts made of walrus hide, inside of which is a small square apartment made of deer skins, which is used as a dining, sitting and bedroom, irrespective of sexes, the only ornament consisting of a stone hollowed, in which is placed small pieces of blubber, and baving moss as a substitute for wick, (which they ignite by friction caused by rubbing two pieces of hard wood together) and this is used as a lamp. On entering this apartment, they all undress, being careful to take their mocassins off with their feet towards the entrance, to which rules we were obliged to conform, although at first repulsive to our feelings.

In winter they live in holes excavated in the mountain side, which we thought however much colder than their summer habitations, as they only lay skins on the ground when about to sleep, which occupies the principal part of the winter. The only daylight is admitted through holes cut in the rock, where in some instances ice is used in lieu of glass. Although the natives are devoid of any clothing, we could hardly keep ourselves warm with our clothes on in these mis erable dwellings. The women are employed during the summer months gathering grass, which they use when dry in their mocassins; also some bitter herbs for edible purposes, which they collect in great quantities, while the men, during that season, are employed pursuing the whale and walrus in on poles, and being very light and commodious, they manage with great dexterity. In killing a whale, which occupies a considerable length of time, the canoes glide so noiselessly through the water, (and the whale being very slothful) the first notice of their near approach is occasioned by one of the natives darting a harpoon, made of ivory, to which is attached a line made of walrus the first ice on the 28th of April, and after capt- hide. At the end of the line is made fast seal uring ten whales we squared our yards for the skins inflated with wind. This process being south. The Japan the hide provides material for huts, canoes, and nets for catching seal, the last are made something similar to our fishing nets. The hunting ashore is confined to the winter months, the chief objects of pursuit being deer, bears, foxes, and a species of Russian rabbit. The weapon chiefly in use is the bow and arrow. The former is made of wood inlaid with deer sinews; the latter, in common with their other weapons, is barbed with ivory. The brown bear, which sleeps during all the winter months, is held in great terror by the natives when he comes out almost famished after his long fast, and is seldom molested by them. The white bear, on the contrary, falls an easy prey, one man being able to despatch him with a lance.

Buttons and Trimmings for tailors' use, Black, White and Brown Liuen Hollands, Black Silk, Polygamy is indulged in to an unlimited extent by the natives, each man having as many wives as he can provide for.
